Reinforced by the pitching of Howell and Sudhoff, the Browns yesterday forced Washington into last place by taking both games. The scores were 7 to 4 and 5 to 1.

It has been some time since such fielding and timely hitting have featured contests like those of yesterday. The Browns' field work was particularly aggressive and Washington never had a chance in either game with Howell and Sudhoff.

Four double plays were registered by the home team, Koehler, who is performing in amazing shape in Tom Jones's shoes, and Wallace executing the trick unassisted. Wallace's brilliant fielding in the second game knocked down several likely looking singles. The faithful were quick to appreciate the king-pun shortstop's work, and applauded the play.

Koehler, Stahl, and Gleason were the hitting stars of the team, and Hickman, in the first, and Andrus, in the second, did good work for the Senators.

FIRST GAME.

Wolfe was hit severely Wednesday and Stahl cast his fortunes with "Long Tom" Hughes. The latter took a grueling punishment from the home side, lasting through one inning, during which the Browns registered five runs on six hits. His successor, "Lott," Adams held the Browns in check during the rest of the contest, allowing them but five hits and two runs. Had Adams started the contest, he would have been forced to extend himself to his limit, as the younger pitcher's effects now deprived the Browns of several runs.

Howell's odd ball, which McKinley introduced to the world of baseball in the country, had the visitors cowed.

After his pitch had won the game in the first inning Harry Koehler had the ball in his pocket, and kind of trouble back of him the Browns were getting away with the sharpest kind of work. And this situation may change the Washington team much, but it is not making any headway. Howell selected seven chances in front of me on my last turn and on down numbers at the extra base.

St. Louis won the opening game on single by Stahl, Van Zant, Frick, Wallace and Koehler in rapid succession. The game was wild, and although it got off to a slow start, the clean single sales above the initials heads and to corners of the diamond where the enemy defense was most effective.

The Browns' bats were as puny as the players at the plate, but each attempt put the batter at second, from where he scored on the next knock. In the fifth, Kuhl, with help from Jones, got the fourth run, and Gleason scored the last of the quintet on Sugden's grand slam to left.

Gleason then left the diamond, and Adams broke in by walking. Koehler Stone was the martyr, Koehler taking second and scoring on Van Zant's smash to left. He was dexterous enough to second and Frick retired the side on a fly to Jones.

The other St. Louis run came in the following inning when Koehler had a hard time getting out of the box, and kind of trouble back of him the Browns were getting away with the sharpest kind of work.

Wednesday night, after a double play in the ninth, Koehler, in the second, and Gleason, in the third, got the last two runs. The ninth, while the entire Brownfield participated, sending a runner on and reaching second away from third base on the return to Wolfe. The score:
